In their groundbreaking book, "How Special Operations and Great Organizations Win on Talent," Brad Thorp and Jay Whitehead reveal the secrets of how these elite units consistently attract, develop, and retain the most capable and motivated individuals. Through in-depth interviews with current and former special operations operators, as well as business leaders, Thorp and Whitehead identify the key principles that organizations can adopt to create a winning talent strategy.

These principles include:

* Defining your talent needs: What are the specific skills and attributes that you need to succeed? * Attracting the best talent: How can you create a workplace that appeals to top candidates? * Developing your talent: How can you provide the training and support that your employees need to succeed? * Retaining your talent: How can you create a culture that keeps your employees engaged and motivated?

Thorp and Whitehead provide practical advice and real-world examples that illustrate how these principles can be applied in any organization. They also share insights from leading business executives who have successfully used these principles to build high-performing teams.

"How Special Operations and Great Organizations Win on Talent" is an essential resource for any organization that wants to improve its talent acquisition and retention strategies. By understanding the principles that have been proven successful by the world's elite forces, you can create a workplace that attracts and engages the best and brightest.
