As Hazel grows, Dave finds herself grappling with the expectations and judgments that society places on mothers. She writes about the pressure to be perfect, to always put her children first, and to sacrifice her own needs for the sake of her family.

Dave also explores the complexities of marriage. She and her husband, Josh, love each other deeply, but they also have their struggles. They argue about parenting, finances, and the division of household labor. Dave writes about the challenges of maintaining a strong partnership while also navigating the demands of parenthood.

Throughout her memoir, Dave writes with honesty and vulnerability about her own experiences. She doesn't shy away from the difficult topics, but she also finds humor and joy in the everyday moments of motherhood and marriage.
