

The Death Class: A True Story About Life

The Death Class is a powerful and moving true story about a group of students who come to terms with their own mortality. This book will stay with you long after you finish it.

Tanya Finchum was a high school English teacher when she was diagnosed with a terminal illness. She decided to teach a class about death and dying, and this book is a record of that class.

The students in Finchum's class come from all walks of life. There is a young woman who is dying of cancer, a middle-aged man who is HIV-positive, and a teenage boy who is struggling with depression. Each student has their own unique story to tell, and each one has their own way of coping with the inevitability of death.

Finchum's class is a safe space where the students can share their fears and anxieties. They talk about what they are afraid of, what they hope for, and what they believe in. They also learn about the different ways that people die, and about the different ways that people grieve.

The Death Class is a book about death, but it is also a book about life. It is a book about the importance of living each day to the fullest, and about the power of love and connection.
