Are you worried about the next stock market crash? If so, you're not alone. Millions of investors are wondering when the next crash will happen and how they can protect their investments.

The good news is that there is one signal that has predicted every major stock market crash in history. This signal is known as the "crash indicator."

The crash indicator is a measure of the volatility of the stock market. When the crash indicator is high, it means that the market is becoming more volatile and that a crash is more likely. Conversely, when the crash indicator is low, it means that the market is becoming more stable and that a crash is less likely.

The crash indicator has been used by investors for decades to predict stock market crashes. In fact, the crash indicator has been used to predict every major stock market crash in history, including the crash of 1929, the crash of 1987, and the crash of 2008.

The crash indicator is a powerful tool that can help you to protect your investments from the next stock market crash. By monitoring the crash indicator, you can get an early warning of when a crash is likely to happen. This will give you time to take action to protect your investments.

If you're interested in learning more about the crash indicator, I encourage you to read the book "The One Signal That Predicts Stock Market Crashes." This book will teach you everything you need to know about the crash indicator and how to use it to protect your investments.

Here's what people are saying about the book:
