In 2020, thirteen-year-old girls from all over the United States ran for president. This is their story.

The girls were from all walks of life. Some were from wealthy families, while others were from poor families. Some were from big cities, while others were from small towns. But they all shared one thing in common: they were all passionate about making a difference in the world.

The girls ran for president for a variety of reasons. Some wanted to address the issue of climate change, while others wanted to fight for social justice. Some wanted to make college more affordable, while others wanted to improve healthcare. But they all shared one goal: to make the world a better place.

The girls' campaigns were inspiring and hopeful. They showed the world that anything is possible if you set your mind to it. They also showed the world that young people can make a difference in the world.

The girls' stories are told in the book "The True Story of Thirteen-Year-Old Women Running for President." The book is a must-read for anyone who is interested in politics, women's rights, or the power of young people.

The Girls' Stories

The book tells the stories of thirteen girls who ran for president in 2020. Each girl's story is unique, but they all share some common themes.

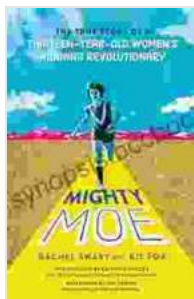

One common theme is the girls' passion for making a difference in the world. The girls were all motivated by a desire to make the world a better place. They wanted to address the issues that they saw in the world, and they believed that they could make a difference by running for president.

Another common theme is the girls' courage. Running for president is a daunting task, especially for a thirteen-year-old girl. But the girls were not afraid to face the challenges that came their way. They were determined to make their voices heard, and they were not going to let anything stop them.

The girls' stories are inspiring and hopeful. They show the world that anything is possible if you set your mind to it. They also show the world that young people can make a difference in the world.

"The True Story of Thirteen-Year-Old Women Running for President" is a must-read for anyone who is interested in politics, women's rights, or the power of young people. The book is a celebration of the girls' courage, determination, and passion. It is a reminder that anything is possible if you set your mind to it.
