The Groveland Boys Case

The Groveland Boys case began in 1949, when four young black men were accused of raping a white woman in Groveland, Florida. The men were arrested and held in jail without bail. They were denied access to lawyers and were subjected to torture and intimidation.

Thurgood Marshall took on the Groveland Boys case and immediately began to fight for their freedom. He filed a motion to dismiss the charges, arguing that the men had been denied their constitutional rights. He also filed a petition for a writ of habeas corpus, arguing that the men were being held illegally.

The trial of the Groveland Boys was a travesty of justice. The all-white jury convicted the men of rape and sentenced them to death. Marshall appealed the convictions to the Florida Supreme Court, but the court upheld the convictions.

Marshall then appealed the convictions to the U.S. Supreme Court. In 1951, the Supreme Court ruled in favor of the Groveland Boys, overturning their convictions and Free Downloading a new trial.

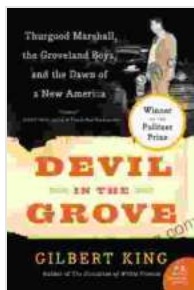

The Groveland Boys were finally released from prison in 1955, after spending six years in jail. They were never retried for the crime they were accused of.
